“This initiative enables Entrex to license its proven and FINRA reviewed regulatory-compliant technology platform to a specific geographic market, establishing a scalable template for future expansion,” said Stephen H. Watkins, CEO of Entrex (www.entrex.net). “The $31 million technology licensing agreement, executed with the Entrex Florida Market is expected to generate cash flow and deliver increased shareholder value for our public company,” he added.

Thomas Harblin, Partner at Entrex, emphasized the strategic importance of the development, stating, “Aligning brokers across Florida along with the state’s economic development initiatives is a key priority for the coming year. Our role is to bring brokers onto the platform and connect them with the capital needed to support transactions. It’s akin to the IPO process but tailored for private companies and the brokers and investors who champion them.”

Harblin also drew parallels with Entrex’s ongoing efforts in the carbon market. “The Entrex Carbon Market has been working toward a mission to provide a marketplace to find, research, track, manage and trade cash-flowing carbon reduction projects. Similarly, the Entrex Florida Market leverages our proven, regulatory-compliant technologies to serve a geographic market close to our hearts.”
