"I'm pleased to report that our presentation at NIBA has once again demonstrated the effectiveness of their platform in informing brokers and investors about our vision and mission," said Stephen H. Watkins, CEO of Entrex.

"Our team engaged with numerous parties during the multi-day event, who are now working with us to advance our initiatives," Watkins continued.

"EPIC expects to deliver its first mobile data mining facilities in the fourth quarter of this year, which means Mr. Watkins' presentation at NIBA put us in front of investors and brokers at the ideal time to support these transactions," said Tom Harblin, an Entrex Partner.

"Through the securitization of projects like these, we anticipate offering our broker-dealer partners and their institutional clients access to high-quality fixed-income and equity securities from tangible projects with quantifiable carbon offset benefits."
